Science – with its incredible technological capabilities – has revealed a reality that is totally connected and completely unified both materially and energetically. The separateness of “things” that we humans accept as fundamental in defining our reality is an illusion, an illusion created by the extreme limitation of our senses. And, importantly, we share this same degree of sensory limitation with all other organic creatures on Earth – just with different species having slightly different sensory windows slits. The great irony is that since we share this illusion of our separateness with all other creatures and since we all behave aggressively with one another in terms of this shared illusion, it is – in effect – our collective reality. We all have evolved in the context of this shared illusion of separateness that is manufactured by the universal limitations of our senses.

Consider just one human sense – sight, our most important sense. We perceive only the tiny “visible” light spectrum within the enormous electromagnetic radiation spectrum. We participate in the entirety of this spectrum, but we are aware of almost none of it. We “see” reality through a visual slit the width of a human hair in a kilometer long spectrum of potential energy “illumination.” Our perception of the material spectrum is equally impaired. We miss the entire microcosm of dust particles, single cell organisms, molecules, atoms, and subatomic particles – a realm vastly more populated than the one we can perceive. And, in spite of the billions of galaxies we have discovered, we have only penetrated 4% of the material macrocosm – Dark Matter remaining a deep mystery. In about three centuries, we humans have gone from regarding ourselves as God’s pinnacle species on Earth at the center of the universe to understanding our species and our planet as being utterly insignificant.

Intellectually, we know all this. Yet we persist in viewing and behaving in this vast and totally integrated reality as if our minuscule, illusory reality of separate “things” constantly battling one another for supremacy is all there is. Humanity is stuck in its perceptual hole playing out its fate as if it is totally ignorant of the material and energetic unification reality it has discovered and confirmed.

You want to support the REAL revolution? Retire humanity’s core illusion of separation and replace it with the core awareness of unification, and humanity’s worldview will be completely transformed. Humans will always be a predatory species taking energy from other sources, but if we make this fundamental perspective change, we will be able to much more responsibly participate and share in our magnificent, totally integrated, REAL Reality.
