

Humanity – Worthy of Continued Existence?

2025

Thomas A. Burns PhD.

Klamath Falls, Oregon

When will we humans appreciate how little of reality we even perceive – much less comprehend? We do not perceive 99.9965% of the electromagnetic energy spectrum, although we participate in all of it. What we refer to as “visible light” is the slit in this spectrum that we perceive only in the reflection of its interaction with material things; we do not perceive it directly. All of the immaterial energy spectra are in this same imperceptible category, and at least 70% of reality is energy with all material phenomena being based and dependent upon it.

Vision is by far our major sense; yet it depends on reflected light, not primary perception. Our technology greatly expands our potential micro and macro material “awareness,” but, unfortunately, it has minimally influenced our actual behavior. We plow through life assuming that we have a good grip on what is real and that we are in large measure able to manipulate it to our goals, when in fact we are just fussing with little edges and very good at messing that up. Mostly, extreme ignorance and comparable arrogance presently define us. While we celebrate the wonders of our sciences, we have only begun to explore the major realm of energy itself and the comprehensive role of energy fields from micro to macro levels of reality. Using the analogy of the life span, we might be at the stage of a few cell divisions beyond conception.

Hubris is currently our most defining characteristic in spite of the fact that in the grand scheme of reality – as we now theoretically comprehend it, we humans collectively amount to only one tiny material jot beyond nothingness.

Wake Up Humanity.

The species extinction exit is always just around the corner.

We have no word sufficient to suggest the level of stupidity that is associated with our killing one another over a few hectares of territory or our pursuing a variety of ways to increase our gains at someone or something else’s expense! And probably 70% of the rest of what we devote ourselves to is not much better!

To Be Worthy of Continued Existence,
We Humans Must

FULLY COOPERATE AND PARTICIPATE
WITH UNIVERSAL RESPECT
AT EVERY SCALE OF REALITY